Sirs,

As of today, July 27, 2014, our contract has expired. Therefore, please promptly take the following actions:

1. Remove my book, The Eternal Perspective: Essays on the Truth of Christianity by a Former Skeptic, from your online book store, and cease all sales and efforts to sell this book.
2. Notify all web sites through whom you made my book available for sale that they must now remove my book from their list of available new books for sale, as you are no longer authorized to publish or sell my book.
3. Send me a final royalty statement and a check for any royalties due. (Your royalty statement of January 31, 2014 indicated that $1.03 in royalties is payable.)

If any of these actions cannot be taken within 30 days from today's date, please notify me of the reasons for the delay and when you expect the action(s) to be completed.

Please acknowledge receipt of this email.

Thank you for your kind cooperation.

May God bless,

Don Davidson

Dear Don Davidson:

According to the terms of the contract, we were required to renew it. This is as per your own agreement the terms of the contract. If you would like to terminate the contract early, then please let us know the reason. We will be happy to consider your request.

Thank you

Our contract, on page 1, is dated July 27, 2007. That was 7 years ago. Paragraph 1 of the contract states that it is to be for a term of 7 years.

On June 23, 2009, I notified you via email that "I am declining to renew our contract when it expires." You acknowledged receipt of this email on June 26, 2009, stating: "Thank you for informing us of your decision not to renew your contract. We have made note. Your contract will end on July 27, 2014 and your book will go out of print."

On February 2, 2010, after noticing that the contract requires the non-renewal notice to be sent via U.S. mail, I sent you a letter advising you that I was declining to renew the contract when it expires.

On February 9, 2010, you sent me an email acknowledging receipt of that letter and stating: "Thank you for the contract renewal [sic] letter. We have received the official copy stating that you will not renew your contract when expires July 27, 2014."

Now would you care to explain why you think that our contract has been renewed when you have twice acknowledged that it would expire on July 27, 2014? I can send you copies of the above-mentioned documents if you have somehow lost them. Or you can read them for yourself--they are posted on my web site, ChristianityForThinkers.com, on the page entitled "The Truth About America Star Books."

Please take the actions I requested in my email of July 27, 2014. I will also expect you to immediately cease all efforts to sell my book, in any form and through any outlet, including your own web site. Your right to "publish" my book has expired.

May God bless,
Don Davidson

Dear Don Davidson:

I am informing you that, as per your request for termination of your contract, we are discontinuing the publication of your book The Eternal Perspective: Essays on the Truths of Christianity by a Former Skeptic as of this day. All rights under the copyright are herewith returned to you.

Your book has been pulled from the market today. No new copies will be printed by America Star Books or made available by America Star Books to individuals, wholesalers or retailers. It has been removed from America Star Books' website. We have also sent notice to retailers that no new copies will be printed. Please note, however, that we have no control over any other online vendors' listing policies, including Amazon's and Barnes and Noble's. Books that are out of print may remain listed there for years on end, even though the industry has now been informed that America Star Books has ceased making any new copies available. Furthermore, retailers and wholesalers may continue to sell used copies, as well as new copies that they had stocked prior to the termination of your agreement with America Star Books. Of course, America Star Books has no control over the sale of your book by third parties.

You own the unformatted text only, and you can do as you choose with that alone. America Star Books continues to own the ISBN number, the cover design, and the layout design of the text. Any use of any of these items would be a serious and very clear case of infringement. Therefore, you can use the same design only if we transfer the rights to you, or to your new publishing company.

If you would like to use the cover or layout design, we would transfer the rights to your cover design and/or text layout, and provide you with a high resolution pdf file of the cover, and a clean, publishable version of the PDF text file. The cover design would cost $500, and/or the text layout would cost $250.

Again, you own the unformatted text only, and you can do as you choose with that alone.

Sincerely,

Caroline DeBroeck
America Star Books, LLLP
